

To Whom It May Concern:

My experience with the No Call list and Indiana Law has been remarkable. I can not thank the Indiana Attorney Generals office for offering such a great law to protect the people of Indiana. Before we signed up for the No Call list, we received at least 1 call a night, always in the evening and in most cases you could not get rid of the telemarketer. Some times I had to just hang up, but the repercussion was they would call back the same night or continue to call for days. Even with an answering machine they would just continue to call until someone answered the phone.

If the FCC wants have phone calls like this then they should pass a law that states if you want telemarketers to call it should be a choice. There is so much on the internet now that individuals can find anything they want just by a click of the mouse. Why should we have to deal with nasty rude people trying to sell us something we have no intention of buying. I feel sorry for the folks that get intimidated by these people and cave in; just to find out they are getting ripped off!

Stop the madness!
